1. POLICY

All University research projects are subject to federal regulations and University policies. Compliance with these regulations and policies is monitored through the University review process. The extent of the internal review depends on the type of research proposed. Investigators shall address any elements of the proposed research that require special review before submitting a proposal to a sponsor. The review process is included in the "Checklist of Project Elements Requiring Special Review and Approval." Each investigator is responsible for ensuring that all of the appropriate individuals and institutional review committees approve his or her research proposal.

Creighton University has developed the Research and Sponsored Programs Compliance Plan to help investigators comply with these regulations.
